Mistrust Lingers as Salvador Peace Talks Near

By Robert J. McCarmey

Washington Post Service SAN SALVADOR — El Salvador's government and the Marxist guerrilla movement opposing it week in an atmosphere of mistrust and doubt, mingled with hope that the negotiations might succeed.

For President José Napoleón Duarte, who has gambled on a bold peace initiative early in his fiveyear term, the overriding question was whether the country's power structure has changed enough to allow him to make meaningful concessions to the left, according to political, diplomatic and academic sources.

They asked whether his elected civilian government, a novelty in El Salvador, was strong enough to make peace despite opposition or at least skepticism within the armed forces, the business community and the violent far right.

"The army sees this as a publicity stunt that will go nowhere," said a military source familiar with the political views of senior Salvadoran officers.

There have been subtle changes in the armed forces' command structure and the attitude of the conservative business community toward Mr. Duarte's moderate policies, political analysts said. U.S. support for Mr. Duarte has played a critical role in encouraging the nation's conservative forces to make their peace with him at least for now, the sources said.

In the army, a group of officers with relatively moderate views have received key positions in the past year while several hard-line officers have been shipped into diplomatic Death squads are also still active. One group, the Secret Anticom-munist Army, on Saturday released a two-page communique accusing Mr. Duarte of "bigh treason" and warning that he and his supporters "will be targets of our military ac-

Mr. Duarte imposed on the left the place, time and intermediaries. He rejected a mediation attempt by President Belisario Betancur of Colombia, issuing a statement that Mr. Betancur "was informed" that the Salvadoran Roman Catholic Church would serve as intermediary as it did in negotiations over a recent prisoner exchange.

Mr. Duarte also rejected the left's proposal that Luis Herrera Campins, the former president of Venezuela, and Willy Brandt, the former chancellor of West Germany, serve as neutral witnesses in the talks, saying that he wanted to keep the talks among Salvadorans. The rebels were to be represent-

Specifically, the Philippines will receive a $650-million standby credit from the International Monetary Fund. This will provide funds to replenish the nation's depleted financial reserves and pave the way for restored lending from the 483 commercial banks that have loaned the Philippines $25.6 billion.

The most politically sensitive steps in the package are higher taxes on petroleum products and an end to controls on most foreign exchange transactions. Economists predict that the value of the peso will decline.

The new tax on oil products will result in higher prices for many consumer goods and services. Private economists say that the auster-ity package could lift inflation from the present 60 percent annual rate to 70 percent for a month or so. ## Envoys Say Ogarkov May Still Hold a Ranking Post

New York Times Service MOSCOW - Marshal Nikolai V. Ogarkov, who was removed as chief of the Soviet general staff, has reappeared in East Germany, and Western diplomats believe he is still holding a ranking position in the Soviet military.

Marshal Ogarkov was reported by the East German press to be heading a Soviet delegation and was shown Friday on East German television being embraced by Erich Honecker, the East German leader. The trip has not been reported by the Soviet press, but there has been speculation that Marshal Ogarkov would be placed in charge of coordinating Soviet troops stationed in Eastern Europe.

Western military attachés said they were as surprised by Marshal Ogarkov's reappearance as they were by the announcement Sept. 6 that he had been removed as chief of staff, the top military post in the Soviet armed forces. He was replaced by his deputy, Marshal Ser-

There has been no official word on the reasons for Marshal Ogar-kov's removal. A highly placed So-viet source told U.S. officials in Washington that be was demoted for "unpartylike" tendencies. There was speculation that he had resisted policy decisions in the military field.

Western diplomats said the meeting with Mr. Honecker, even though publicized only by the East Germans, suggested that Marshal Ogarkov had not fallen into total disfavor in the Kremlin.

The East German press agency said the two men had discussed questions of further strengthening the cooperation and deepening the brotherhood in arms" hetween their countries' two armed forces.

Ford, Auto Union Agree on Contract DEARBORN. Michigan (UPI) — Ford Motor Co. and the United Auto Workers reached tentative agreement Sunday on a "pattern" contract giving 114,000 workers wage and job security provisions similar to those in a new UAW-General Motors Corp. agreement.

Ford's contract was extended last month when the union chose GM as its strike target. The union did not invoke its right to strike on 72 hours notice, nor did it call local walkouts, a tactic used at GM when the two failed to reach agreement by their Sept. 14 deadline.

Voting on an earlier contract with General Motors Corp. commed Sunday night, with the latest informal tally showing the contract winning approval from about 59 percent of those voting.

Press Pool Not Set, Weinberger Says

CAIRO (LAT) — Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger said that despite previous reports, no decisions have been made regarding the makeup of Pentagon press pools that would be formed to cover certain military operations. He criticized reports that such a pool would exclude Route 66, the old highway across the western United States celebrated in song and story, is no more. A ribbon-cutting ceremony in Arizona Saturday opened the final sixmile leg of Interstate 40, the superhighway that replaced much of U.S. 66. Stretch by stretch over the past three destretch over the past three de-cades, the old road has been torn up or bypassed with a series of modern highways.

U.S. 66 first came into being in 1926, when much of the route was still dirt. The highway started at Jackson Boulevard and Michigan Avenue in Chicago and stretched through Missouri, Oklahoma, Texas, New Mexico and Arizona before ending at the Pacific Ocean in Santa Monica, California, In John Steinbeck's novel,

"The Grapes of Wrath," the Joad family traveled U.S. 66 as they migrated west in the 1930s. Bobby Troup wrote a song about the highway in the 1940s that went, "Get Your Kicks on Route 66." He will be guest of honor at the ribbon-cutting.

Reagan Casts Himself as Truman in Tour of Ohio

By David Hoffman

Washington Post Service
OTTAWA, Ohio — President Ronald Reagan has cast himself as a latter-day Harry S. Truman in a whistle-stop railroad tour across Ohio, borrowing the former Demo-cratic president's old U.S. Car One and directing echoes of Mr. Truman's combative rhetoric at today's Democrats.

The Democratic presidential nominee, Walter F. Mondale, has accused Mr. Reagan of "grave-rob-bing" Democratic heroes, and Mr. Reagan taunted his rival Friday by summoning up memories of Tru-man and Franklin D. Roosevelt to reinforce his own appeal to Demo-"You know, Harry Truman rode this state in his whistle-stop tour of 1948, and he spoke some very hlunt truths," Mr. Reagan told a crowd by the rail tracks in Sidney, Ohio. "And that's what I'm going to do."

Mr. Reagan also accused Mr. Mondale of taking a "Fritz-flop" on the issue of tax indexing, and said, "If Harry Truman had to apply a motto to his radical taxing scheme, be'd have to say, not Your buck stops here,' but Your buck never stops."

"In our debate," Mr. Reagan said, "I got a little angry at all the times he distorted my record. And at one point I was about to say to him very sternly, 'Mr. Mondale, you are taxing my patience. And then I caught myself. Why should I give him another idea? That's the only tax be hasn't thought about."

Roosevelt "told us the only thing we have to fear is fear itself," Mr. Reagan said. "The only thing my opponent has to offer is fear itself." Mr. Reagan used the picturesque settings of small-town Ohio to un-veil a combative new stump speech that repeatedly attacked Mr. Mondale's role in the Carter administration and quoted Jimmy Carter as saying Mr. Mondale was involved

Mr. Reagan cast his last vote for a Democrat in the 1948 election, when Truman whistle-stopped 31,700 miles (51,400 kilometers), giving 356 speeches in 35 days in his uphill campaign against Thom-cally to the Truman tradition Friday: "I respected Harry Truman's ability to stand for what he believes, his consistency of principles and his determination to do the right thing. Walter F. Mondale, the Democratic presidential nominee, has charged that President Ronald Reagan has a "secret plan" to reduce Social Security benefits. Mr. Reagan has denied it, saying he would oot cut benefits for current

White House officials said they had not requested and did not know about any analysis of private alternatives to Social Security. If the Social Security Administration did such a study, they said, it was purely academic and theoretical.

Edwin L. Dale Jr., a spokesman for the Office of Management and Budget, said he knew of "no administration initiative to change anything" in Social Security. There's oothing cooking oo Social Security," he said. "There's no reason to have anything cooking. The system is perfectly solvent for as far ahead as you can see, even under pessimistie economie assumptions. There will be large surpluses in the Social Security Trust Fund in the 1990s."

Social Security provides retire-ment, disability and survivor benefits to 36 million people. The program is expected to cost $189 billion in the current fiscal year, which began Oct. 1.

Social Security officials minimized the significance of the briefing for Mrs. McSteen in mid-June, saying it was one of many conductthe briefing was part of an "educa- ed for her on various topics. The papers discussing the private alternatives were made available by a former high official of the agency who opposes the changes described in them.

The documents made no recommendations but analyzed "argu-ments for privatization" of Social Security. One of the ehref argu-ments was that "the rate of return on Social Security is less than on private alternatives." Mr. Reagan made that argument in radio hroadcasts in 1978, but he has not repeated it as president.

The rate of return measures the annual yield on an investment by comparing the total paid back to an investor with the value of his or her contributions over the years, plus interest that continues to accumulate until all payments to the investor have been made.

One of the hriefing papers prepared for Mrs. McSteen said. "Social Security is a mixture of 'insur-ance' and 'welfare." Under the private alternatives to Social Security, the paper said, "insurance would be provided by private firms" and "welfare would be provided by the government through a means-tested program.

White House aides insist, and independent data tend to confirm their claim, that nothing has happened to put Mr. Reagan's re-election prospects in jeopardy.

The IRA vs. Democracy

fied the killing of a child. The Irish Republican Army, like the terrorists in his novels, disagrees. IRA adherents believe that any deed is sanctified as long as it promotes the cause of purging Northern Ireland of British "occupiers." So its bombing in Brighton, which came close to killing Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, is of the same piece as its slaughter of Christmas shoppers, its terror bombing of a dance hall and its "execution" of suspected Catholic traitors, youngsters included.

But the characters in "The Possessed" lived under the czar's malign despotism and saw themselves as surrogates for wretched and voiceless peasants. By contrast, the IRA aims to destroy democracy and uses bombs in disguise its lack of real support. Indeed, it gets most of its money not in Ireland but in America from otherwise law-abiding citizens — a bizarre twist exceeding Dostoyevsky's fiction.

This is not conjecture. On Sept. 29 Irish authorities seized the trawler Marita Anne, bound from an American port with seven tons nf weaponry, including machine guns, hand grenades, rifles and enough ammunition in kill thousands. Dublin has no doubt about who produced the cash for this arsenal: well-meaning Americans responding to pleas for "hu-manitarian" help from IRA fund-raisers.

Contributors should consider the meaning of Friday's Brighton blast, which killed four and injured 32. The nominal target was the Dostoyevsky once wrote that no cause justi-ed the killing of a child. The Irish Republican final day was to debate Northern Ireland. The real target was Mrs. Thatcher before she could confer, within a month, with her Irish counterpart, Garret FitzGerald. On the agenda are new ideas for giving more rights to 500,000 Catholics in Northern Ireland, ideas furiously opposed by hard-liners among a million Protestants, the Catholics' historic oppressors.

Protestant zealotry and violence finds its match in the IRA's determination to wreck any democratic initiatives that fall short of imposing a united Irish Socialist Republic.

Outside the slums of Northern Ireland, the IRA speaks only for itself. A reputable August poll shows that only 2 percent of the Irish Republic's voters support its Sinn Fein party, and that 80 percent of the people in the North have no use whatever for either the illegal IRA or the Protestant paramilitary groups that also preach violence. Indeed, 66 percent in the Republic believe their government is not taking a hard enough line against the IRA.

Small wonder that the IRA has turned overseas for support it cannot find in Dublin, playing on the gullibility of a small minority among the 40 million Americans of Irish descent. The next time the hat is passed, those tempted to contribute should ask how they would feel if money were raised in another country to finance an attempt to assassinate the president of the United States.

East German Semblance

ry on Oct. 7 with the usual military display. As national drama it lacked conviction. Events keep reminding the East German government that a substantial number of its people would unwelcome reminder of the intensity, not in rather live in West Germany and some are say apprehension, with which the rest of Euready to take real risks to get there. About 80 East Germans spent the anniversary weekend crowded into the West German Embassy in Prague, pleading for asylum. Legal emigration from East Germany this year has been the greatest since the Berlin Wall cut off free access 23 years ago. Another half million East Germans, out of a population of 17 million, have applied for exit permits. That is a pretty convincing index of discontent, and of West Germany's magnetic attraction.

The West Germans, with their overtures, their expanding trade and their financial subsidies to East Germany, sometimes seem m be hinting at some larger change. That is currently setting off ripples of uneasiness in Western Europe as well as in the East. Unfair though it seems to many Germans, the division of Germany has become, to other Europeans, a symbol of political stability.

Italian Foreign Minister Giulio Andreotti said in a speech in Rnme last month that "pan-Germanism is something that must be overcome. There are two German states and two reacted with fury, but they know that Mr. Andreotti is not the only West European who holds views like that. His remark was another rope regards anything that suggests even a modest rise in German national feeling. In the West the question remains the familiar one: bow to gradually expand East Germans' narrow areas of personal freedom without threatening the present political structure of Europe and inviting another wave of Soviet repression. East and West Germany were founded within a few months of each other in the aftermath nf the Berlin blockade. West Germany is a genuine national presence and a democracy; since East Germany is neither, it remains a source of instability. As a remedy to restlessness the East German government has been trying in persuade its people that they are a genuine country and the heirs of the true German national tradition, unlike the deplorably Westernized Bonn republic. Thus there is ceremonial goose-stepping in East Berlin and the embrace of un-Marxist figures like Martin Luther and Frederick the Great. To judge from the audience's reaction, the performance seems not to be much of a success.

Costlier Poor Weapons

Every American taxpayer should visit one of the air force's C-5 transport planes. He should climb the $74,000 aluminum folding ladder and sink into the $13,000 crew chief's seat. There, sipping coffee from the $7,622 coffee brower he can peoder just how much contained to the specific planes. The seat peoder just how much contained to the specific planes are specifically and more things to go wrong, so fewer can be bought, and more things to go wrong, so fewer weapons still are available for combat. In 1951, 6,000 fighter planes were produced for $7,622 coffee brower he can peoder just how much contained to the specific planes. He should and more things to go wrong, so fewer can be bought, and more things to go wrong, so fewer weapons that the specific planes is the specific planes. He should all more things to go wrong, so fewer weapons that the specific planes is the specific planes. He should all more things to go wrong, so fewer weapons the specific planes is the specific planes. He should all more things to go wrong, so fewer weapons the specific planes is the specific planes. He should all more things to go wrong, so fewer weapons the specific planes is the specific planes. He should all more things to go wrong, so fewer weapons the specific planes is the specific planes. He should all more things to go wrong, so fewer weapons the specific planes is the specific planes. He should be provided the specific planes in the specific planes in the specific planes. He should be provided the specific planes in the specific planes in the specific planes in the specific planes. He should be provided the specific planes in the specific planes. He should be provided the specific planes in the specific p brewer, he can ponder just how much extra billion purchased fewer than 300 fighter security the Pentagon has bought with its fouryear, $755-billion military spending program.

Congress has now seen enough nverpriced military spare parts to realize that waste and extravagance are endemic to the procurement system. But the Pentagon whistle-blowers who bring these excesses in light are not so much worried about prices. Their concern is that the Pentagon has lost effective control over the design and procurement of new weapons.

Lack of competition among contractors stimulates shoddy quality. Last month a Hughes Aircraft plant stopped production due to numerous defects in three major missiles. "We see things that are just as badly done all over the country," says the navy official responsible for closing the Hughes plant down.

The navy wants more competition. Defective weapons are a beavy drain on repair budgets, but at every upswing in defense spending the services prefer starting production lines for new weapons over repairing those on hand. The General Accounting Office reports that a quarter of the navy's Sidewinder missiles, the principal air-to-air combat weapon, were unserviceable. And 80 percent of the marines' anti-tank missiles have a "flyback" problem - they are liable to boomerang back on their dispatcher. That is after three years of increased spending by an administration that rightly wants to improve readiness.

On the principle that Russian numbers must be offset by superior quality, the Pentagon's weapons tend in be excessively complex. That ious form of unilateral disarmament. The costlier new weapons are not even more effective, because their developers seem to lose sight of what actually works in combat. Under contractor pressure and a penchant for high technology, the Pentagon often allows "goldplating" - the addition of expensive extra features that are useful only in extreme cases.

Thus the navy justifies nuclear-powered attack submarines on the grounds of higher speed. But diesel-electric subs are ultra-quiet, which is far more critical to survival than speed, and cost an eighth as much. The army's M-1 tank goes faster than the M-60Al it replaces, but it costs three times as much and breaks down twice as often. The air force's F-15 fighter violates a basic principle of air combat by having engines that smoke, thus betraying its position to an opponent. The Sergeant York air-defense gun uses radar and computers to do the same task as the buman eye, but far less reliably. In these cases, extra cosi has meant less quality and less quantity. The Pentagon lost internal discipline over weapons design and competitive control over its contractors long before Caspar Weinberger became secretary of Defense. His error is in have poured money into this procurement process without first reforming it. The tracedy is that instead of improving defense, he has bought much more of the same poor product.

Duarte's Hope to Negotiate Peace Depends on El Salvador's Officers

By Miguel Acoca

WASHINGTON — President José Napo-león Duarte's bid for talks with rebel leaders has long been in the cards. Whether a peace agreement ending the civil war emerges depends more on the Salvadoran officer corps and Washington than on the guerrilla leaders. Fidel Castro. the Soviet Union or Mr. Duarte himself.

No doubt Mr. Duarte is acting from convic-tion. He is supported by a broad, loose consti-mency that includes like-minded politicians, Roman Catholic clergymen, campesinos, labor unions and progressive military officers. The principal component in this coalition consists of officers who have long felt that the army cannot win just by killing guerrillas and destroying the countryside - that only negotiations with the leftist rebels can end the carnage that has claimed tens of thousands of lives, disrupted the economy and visited misery on the populace.

In recent months Mr. Duarte and the military's progressives have won some backing from conservative officers who fear they are losing control of their power base in the armed forces to a tough new breed of commanders whose atti-tudes were forged under U.S. influence and whose main objective is battlefield victory.

Annther factor influencing President Duarte, the officers, the rebel comandantes and the Roman Catholie hierarchy is Mr. Duarte's certitude that unless the war is curtailed it will escalate as the United States supplies lethal AC-47 gun-ships and more helicopters and as the rebels counter with anti-aircraft missiles.

The question is whether the progressive officers are strong and united enough to keep ultra-right officers, politicians and businessmen in check during peace talks, and whether Washington, which has manipulated Salvadoran military factions for decades, will throw its weight behind

President Duarte and the progressives in any long, difficult negotiations.

Many political observers in the United States tend to measure movement toward democracy in Central America by free and fair elections. Nothing could be more mistaken. Voting results are important, but what remains crucial is military officers' attitudes. This is particularly so in El Salvador, where the war is being fought by an entrenched military establishment that has dictated government policy for generations.
U.S. policy-makers and the intelligence community know better than anybody the moods and attitudes of Salvadoran military factions. Since World War II Washington has studied, educated, manipulated, indoctrinated and re-warded the Salvadoran armed forces. The CIA and the Defense Intelligence Agency have put trusted Salvadoran officers on the payroll to spy on colleagues and report on internal military power struggles, in part of a worldwide effort in determine who is for and against the United States. Mr. Duarte and the officers know this.

Many officers, on the right as well as among progressives, complain that U.S. intelligence efforts are devoted almost entirely to Salvadoran military rivalries, in the neglect of the divisions and rivalries in the rebel movement.

Some progressive officers fear that Washington will sabotage any deal Mr. Duarte devises with the rebels if it does not take U.S. priorities into account. They also mistrust conservative officers who have fallen in line with Mr. Duarte nnt because they believe in peace but because they hope to thwart him and the progressives.

The progressives point nut that in 1962 conservative officers began compiling a dossier on Mr. Duarte intended to prove he is a Communist. The dossier, which is available to anyone, con-cludes that he secretly favors the rebels and is ready to betray his country in the Communists.
Such charges against him — echoed by Salvadoran, Nicaraguan and Cuban exiles in the United States - are being broadcast today in an effort in undermine any peace initiative.

In El Salvador, as in most of Latin America, the officer corps is the dominant political force. It can curb or unleash death squads, ratify election results and veto or support peace talks. The military is the final arbiter, and Mr. Duarte, despite his election, is its bostage.

ROCKFORD, Illinois — Tn this observer, wandering the country far from Washington in the closing weeks of the presidential cam-paign, there has been something outrageous in the sudden din about "the age factor" that is sounding forth an America's airwaves. I would not be surprised to turn on the televi-sion in some motel and find reporters shouting questions at Ronald Reagan: "Just when did you start feeling gaga, Mr. President?" or "What's it like when you lose your marbles?" In fact there is simply an credible evidence that Mr. Reagan is anything other than what he has seemed; a 73year-old in unusually good health, with a strong constitution that enabled him to bounce back remarkably from a gunshot wound in the chest. Nor is there anything to sug-gest that suddenly he has gone senile. All this snarling of the pack and circling of the sharks detracts from the real significance of an extraordinary political event. I offer the testimony of Rockford, Illinois - Reagan country if any exists. It is the territory in which he grew up. It has

My point is that an absolute unamy point is that an absolute una-nimity of opinion exists about what happened. In my experience, such pohilical unanimity is unprecedented. In all the other comparable politi-cal encounters, beginning with Nix-on-Kennedy in 1960 and on through Ford-Carter in 1976 and Carter-Reagan in 1980, no matter what the polls and pundits proclaimed about who "won"; the debate—a stupid exercise at best - I always found many people who believed their guy had done best. ## The Great Speech Reader Minus Script

NEW YORK — President Rea-gan would have fared better during the Louisville ambush if, as be-fore his 1980 debate with Jimmy Carter, his aides had stolen his opponent's briefing book. This time he had to stand up there on his own and defend the indefensible without benefit of Mr. Mondale's game plan.

If Mr. Reagan had known, for instance, that Mr. Mondale was prepared to return throat-high his "there you go again" line, the president like-ly would not have served it up. This turning-point exchange was the volley the fans surely were talking about out in the parking lot and on the freeway during the drive home.

During rehearsals for the Carter debate, Reagan advisers had full use of the purloined bouk outlining Mr. Carter's suggested answers, Mr. Rea-gan's expected rebuttals and finally Mr. Carter's suggested replies to the rebuttals. Inoculated against surprises, Ronald Reagan at the podium ppeared calm, controlled, unflappae, vigorous even.

This time, every Mondale charge emed to surprise and bewilder the president, who seemed as tangled in his spoon-fed figures and facts as a bull in barbed wire.

What suits Mr. Reagan is reading from a prepared or partly memorized text. It is the hallmark of a flabby mind best suited for actors, evangelists and television anchormen. Faced with uncertainty, complex choices and the snares of the real world, such a mind goes off duty, exposing its owner as the cipher he happens to be. Mr. Reagan's handlers seem not to be unaware of this special defect in their Great Speech Reader. Why else risk scandal by stealing the Carter briefing book? Or go in such extreme ends to protect Mr. Reagan from the By Les Payne media? Or reduce his campaign largely to one of photo opportunities?

After watching Mr. Reagan sweat rather freely over the unscripted give-and-take, columnist George Will no doubt hoped that his man would gather himself during his final, rehearsed, four-minute statement, But. Mr. Reagan "was worst when he should have been best, in the closing statement," Mr. Will wrote (IHT, Oct. 10). By this time he looked like an old gentleman out for a Sunday drive in his antique car finding himself suddenly in the middle of the running of the Firecracker 500. After the Carter-Reagan debate in 1980, I wrote in my notebook:

There was that moment when Reagon, in summarizing, said that when Americans ask themselves if they have been satisfied with President Carter's four years, the answer will be clear, Well, unfortunately, as any intelligent grasshopper must know, the answer is not that clear. One could be thoroughly and totally dissatisfied with the Carter years, one could despise the president, his brother and even Amy's dolls and still reject this actor, Reagan.

For he is, at bottom, at least to these tired eyes, an appalling cipher. Toward the end of the 96-minute debate, with his head bobbing and his sweating face

Mr. Reagan, of course, reportedly won that 1980 debate with eye twinkle, voice tone and all the other superficial indexes better suited to select a television game show host than the leader of the most powerful nation on the planet. ## In Fairness, Age Really Is an Issue

By James Reston

WASHINGTON — The argument goes on in Washingun about President Reagan's age, bealth and performance in the Louisville debate with Walter Mondale. But his wandering answers and confusing over the facts of domestic policy and even over the control of nuclear weapons — this not for the first time in Louisville - are not private matters that can be blamed on somebody else. They are legitimate public ques-tions when the aldest president in the history of the republic is seeking re-election at the age of 73. In private life, it is insensitive, even cruel, in make an issue within a family, for example, about the frailties of the old folk, when their energies and responsibilities are dwindling. But in public life, where problems, tensions and responsibilities never end — and these days even seem to increase—age and the eroding paralysis of time cannot be avoided.

In fairness, when you watch Ron-ald Reagan jumping up on Harry Truman's whistle-stop train in Ohio, two steps at a time, be seems as strong as a horse, maybe because he has paid more attention to horses than to politics. Even his bair, which thing new about his intellectual fum-bles in Louisville is that many of the 100 million Americans who were watching saw them for the first time.

But, also in fairness, there is little evidence that advancing years improve memory or remove mental confusion. And anbody knows, not our doctors or our wives or our children, when such things begin in change.

What we do know — and this may have nothing in do with Reagan — is that some presidents in the past drifted into the shadows without knowing it, and that their weaknesses were covered up by their families, their political associates and by a sympathetic or indifferent press.

The record is in the books but is usually ignored by every new genera-tion. In 1881, when President Garfield was shot, he loitered in and out of consciousness for 80 days, leaving the nation without effective presiden-tial leadership. Chester Arthur, Gro-ver Cleveland, Woodrow Wilson and even Franklin Roosevelt all suffered and covered up the ailments of advancing age, usually without the knowledge of the American people, even when, as in 1944, they were voting Roosevelt into a fourth term.

The point is not to suggest that Mr. Reagan is not in good physical health. The point is that at his age neither he nor anybody else can be sure about the next four years, and this is a question any serious voter must take into account.

An odd thing about this controversy over Louisville and the president's age is that it is being presented as a partisan issue that is not fair and maybe even vicious. But there is a more important question of fairness for the voters: Fair to whom — to the president at his age or in the nation? The New York Times.

The March To German Consensus

By William Stivers

MUNICH — A year ago this month, close to a million demonstrators took to the streets in West Germany to denounce the approach. ing deployment of U.S. cruise and Persbing-2 missiles. The government's decision to accept these weap-ons, although it was regarded as a crucial test of West Germany's com-mitment to the North Atlantic alliance, was widely unpopular. Today, by all appearances, the government has weathered the storm, but not without paying a price.

One year later, quiet prevails; the peace movement seems disprited and unfocused. But this surface inand unfocused. But this surface impression masks a basic shift; the government has bought political peace with an Osipolitik that has the effect of downplaying the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and further eroding pro-alliance sentiment among the West German people.

Critics of the peace movement take comfort from the movements's seen-ing collapse — its failure to prevent deployment and its inability to sustain last fall's initiative. But thus is a mistakenly narrow judgment, for a number of reasons.

In the first place, sensationalist reporting overestimated the demonstrators' efforts in make the country ungovernable." It was only a tiny minority that sought to create disor-der, and the demonstrations were no-able for uncommon discipline. Second and more important the real effect of the movement cannot be measured by mass demonstrations. True, the rise of a direct, extra-pariamentary opposition was a major turning point in West German politics. But the enduring success of the peace movement lies in deep changes that it triggered elsewhere on the political scene: the leftward movement of the Social Democratie Party on foreign policy; the involvement of churches and labor unions in the arms debate; the awakening of millions of middle-class voters who support the Christian Democrats but opposed their stand on deployment.

Faced with such wide opposition, government politicians saw that they could not mollify the public through a simple, no-apologies affirmation of the Atlantic alliance. They aban-daned the rhetoric of that commitment - one scarcely hears about NATO today - and sought legitimation through an expanded Ostpolitik, particularly a dramatic "thickening" of ties with East Berlin.

West Germans, both in govern ment and in opposition, see this opening as a kind of historic mission what Chancellor Helmut Kohl has called a shared German "responsibility for peace." Whereas the West Germans once contributed to world peace through adherence to NATO, they now serve peace by pursuit of a German detente that supposedly pro-vides a model for all the world. The implications of this shift in consciousness can scarcely be overestimated. NATO still exists and West Germany still adheres to it, but the alliance has last relevance. people's awareness, even while they assume its protection. One might argue that Mr. Kohl's own commitment to NATO is undiminished - that his government is merely playing to the political situa-tion. That may well be true, but it may not be very signficant.

What about Mr. Kohl's own future? The costs of the deployment decision have nally recently begun to make themselves felt. In August the Soviet Union launched a venomous propaganda campaign against the Kohl govern ment, and last month the East German leader, Erich Honecker, can-celed a keenly awaited visit to West Germany. The Bulgarian leader, Todor Zhivkov, did likewise.

Meanwhile, the parliamentary opposition of Social Democrats and Greens has begun in question the Kohl government's belief that it could extend Ostpolitik without addressing the nuclear arms issue and the general context of East-West relations. Opposition leaders ques-tion the chancellor's ability to control the right-wing fringe of his coalition, and they are asking whether the gov-erument has the basic competence to carry ont Ostpolitik.

The answer to this last question could determine the political future of the government, so great is the West German consensus for détente. Simple adherence in the NATO commitment and friendly relations with the Reagan administration provide no basis for foreign policy consensus in West Germany today.

NAIROBI — Kenya's leader, Daniel Arap Moi, celebrated Sun-day the sixth anniversary of his presidency after assuming in recent weeks a tough oew image that has shaken up political life in this East African country.

Mr. Moi has stamped his mark firmly on the presidency and has traded his avuncular image for a tougher public profile. When he became president six years ago after the death of Jomo Kenyatta, the country's first president, he was seen by some Kenyan political commentators as only a temporary

They were not the first to arrive; there are thought to be 50,000 displaced people in Ndjamena, previously a city of 300,000. In Chad as a whole, which has a population of slightly under five million, about 150,000 people are believed to have fled their homes to survive.

But the effect of the long dry spell on Chad is only part of a larger problem: Io Africa south of the Sahara, 150 million people are suffering as a result of drought. As been set up where displaced people many as five million are said to could be housed and fed. Relief have become refugees. boundaries. The drought has hit particularly hard in the Sahel-Sudan belt, an ecologically fragile swath of territory stretching south of the Sahara desert from Mauritania on the Atlantic to Somalia on the Indian Ocean 3,500 miles away. In Chad, relief officials believe 1,000 people have died as a result of starvation or malnumitioo since July. The situation, they said, is almost certain to deteriorate further when what is normally re-will last. Many scientists fear, however, that a long-term climatic change may be under way, aggravated to some degree by such manmade ecological damage as overgrazing and extensive cutting of forests.

The drought of the early 1970s and the current drought, a growing number of experts have come to suspect, may be oot separate eveous but rather symptoms of the same trend or of a single phase in the climatic cycle.

Relief officials say they believe it will be more difficult to help Chad than most of the other droughtstricken countries of Africa. The country is landlocked and the best port in the region is at Lagos, Nigeria. But Nigeria has closed its bor-ders with its oeighbors, saying it has economic problems of its own. Even if adequate supplies of food do arrive, distribution is likely to be a logistical nightmare, the relief officials said. The north of Chad has been under the control of Libvan-backed rebels for more than a year, and insurgent activity has been flaring sporadically in the south as well. The country has oo railroads or

Pope Decries 'Colonialism' in Americas

Dear Reader,

In June of this year we published in the paper a full page questionnaire which we asked you to fill out and return to us. We explained then that the information gathered by such research helps us in the development of our newspaper and its advertising markets. 1 am pleased to say that there was an exceptional response to this request with nearly 12,000 questionnaires returned for analysis to Research Services Ltd., an independant research group. Our thanks to all of you who returned a questionnaire for the time and trouble which you took.

As we have done in the past, we are printing here the results of this research, with the hope that they will be of interest to you. As we promised, a charitable donation of $1 was made for each questionnaire returned: this was done in accord with respondent preference so that CANCER RESEARCH received $5,639, UNICEF $2,909 and The RED CROSS $3,176.

With our warmest thanks,

Lee HUEBNER

Advantages of Dollar Issues Is Not So Great, Study Says

ARIS - How much would the dollar have to fall in the foreign exchange market to crase the advantage of the higher interest rates available on dollar Eurobonds? Not much, at least over the short term, says a study produced by Société Générale Strauss Turnbull.

The report, called "Points of No Return," is the sixth in a series that have been issued irregularly since April 1978. The trading house defines points of no return as the level at which the exchange rate has to move to neutralize the difference in interest

The new study, which used exchange rates prevailing Oct. 1, shows that over a two-year period, the dollar would have to decline 11.4 percent (from 3.0796 Deutsche marks on Oct. 1 to 2.7290 DM) before the interest-rate gap of nearly 6 percentage points in favor of the dollar was neutralized. Over the same period, the study says, "the investor who wishes to diversify out of dollar bonds must be certain the dollar will fall 14 percent against the Swiss franc, 9 percent against the guilder and 12 percent against the yen." Against sterling, the fall is a much smaller 2 per-

Moving out to a five-year horizon, and assuming that interest income is reinvested at rates currently prevailing, needed to neutralize the much higher dollar interest rates doubles. The dollar would have to drop 24 percent to 2.3471 DM, or 30 percent to 1.7877 Swiss francs or 24 percent to 187.55 yea.

Over a 15-year period, the required decline of the dollar more than doubles again; 52 percent to 1.469 DM, 63 percent to 0.9468 Swiss francs, 51 percent to 120.87 yea.

The critical assumption, of course, is the compounding rate of interest, which assumes that rates available in later years are comparable to those available today. This may or may not be a big assumption, depending on how one views the future. But the instrument exists to lock in that assumed reinvestment rate, zero-

Zeroes currently are believed to have limited appeal, to investors who for domesue tax reasons prefer reporting capital gains income rather than annual interest income. But when looked at from the Strauss Turnbull study, zeroes also offer a way for non-dollar investors to lock up yield protection against fluctuations in the foreign exchange rate.

Last week, for example, Exxon sold to Merrill Lynch $1.8 billion nominal amount of 20-year zeroes. The amount actually raised was only $200 million as Merrill paid Exxon only 11.05 percent of the face value. Merrill set the resale price at 11.65, but the paper was changing hands at around 11.20.

The list of co-managers surprised the market, for while it included the anticipated Japanese securities firms it also contained a large number of West German banks as well as Swiss, French and Luxembourg banks.

European bankers say the major appeal of zeroes (as well as warrants) is the low dollar cash outlay at a time when the dollar remains extremely strong on the foreign exchange market and unattractive to buy.

In the warrant market, Finnish Export Credit, Toronto Dominion Bank and Mitsubishi Finance each sold $100 million of short-term notes with or bearing warrants (options), to buy seven-year bonds bearing coupons identical to those offered on

The underlying notes all traded at substantial discounts because the coupons in today's market are not deemed attractive. But the small outlay for the relatively long-dated options made that paper appealing.

The FEC warrants, to buy 12%-percent bonds, were initially valued at $32.50 but ended the week at $38. Mitsubishi's warrants, to buy 12% percent securities, were offered at $33 and ended the week at $38.50. The difference between the two is the (Continued on Page 11, Col. 4)

Bank Bid On Debts Rejected

Extension Given By Mexico Court

By Gordon Mort

MEXICO CITY — A Mexican
court has ruled that Cerveceria Moctezuma, one of Mexico's largest breweries, must be allowed to repay its debt to foreign banks over the next three years.

The ruling ended, at least tempo-rarily, an attempt by the foreign banks, led by Bank of America and Chase Manhattan, to force the immediate repayment by the beer company of debts totaling more than $340 million.

And it averted what would have been the first bankruptcy in the renegotiation of a number of private-sector debts with foreign

At one point, Northwestern

Steelmakers Look Past Low Prices, Overcapacity to See Cause for Hope

New York Times Service

CHICAGO — For several years, the world's steelmakers have felt that they were in a bottomless pit, dug by excess capacity and deepened by falling demand. But the dozens of steel executives who assembled here last week for the annual conference of the International Iron and Steel Institute seemed to feel they had reached bottom and were coming up again.

Steelmakers are still plagued by worldwide overcapacity, which is depressing prices and decimating profits, and are concerned about protectionist pressures. But there was a distinct note of opumism at the gathering, which included steelmakers both from developing and industrialized nacons. "I think we will find not too far away a new balance between supply and demand," said Jacques P. Michel, associate director-general of Usinor, France's largest steelmaker. An optimistic estimate of when that will occur, he said, was "in just two or three years."

Steelmakers here said they were more encouraged than they had been since the 1982 recession, which caused steel demand to plummet. They said they were heartened that global demand was pick-ing up and that steelmakers around the world were finally taking substantial steps to get capacity in line with demand.

They expressed guarded relief that the Reagan administration had rejected the U.S. industry's demand for a quota to limit imports to 15 percent of the market, and instead promised to negotiate agreements to limit imports to 18.5 percent, Many executives predicted that protectionist pressures would subside as supply and demand came more closely into balance.

Still, the manufacturers agreed that their problems were far from over. Several executives said the industry would be awash in overcapacity for another decade. "There's about 200 million more tons of capacity worldwide than we need," said E. Bradley Jones, chairman of LTV Steel, the company formed by the merger of Republic Steel Corp. with Jones & He and most other executives here agreed that even though the industry had closed mills with more than 50 million tons of capacity in the last five years, more difficult cuts lay ahead. Many said another 15 percent of worldwide capacity had to be cut, largely by closing older plants in the United States and Europe. According to the steel institute, the developing and industrial nations in the non-Communist world have a steelmaking capacity of about 640 million metric tons. The institute projects that steel demand will be just 438 million tons this year, 441 million next year and 467 million in 1995. The institute's secretariat said capacity had to be reduced by between 30 million and 70 million metric tons by 1990 to help bring supply and demand into balance. "People have to close down capacity," said Lenhard J. Holschuh, the secretary-general of the institute, which is the trade association of the industrial world's steelmakers. "Everyone has to

Study Predicts Rise in Spending By U.S. Business

The council's study, released Sauurday, predicts a 20-percent increase in investment this year and a 10-percent increase in 1985. It notes that excess production capacity in many industries has disap-peared during the economic recov-ery, while the prospect of continuing growth, coupled with tax benefits for business investment in plant and equipment, has boosted spending plans.

This investment, involving some purebases of high-technology equipment, will boost productivity and continue to hold down labor costs, according to the study. U.S. labor costs this year are rising at their slowest rate in a decade.

The group revised upward its spring forecast for 1984 growth in the U.S. gross national product. The business leaders now predict growth of 7.2 percent this year, the strongest annual rise in 30 years, and of 3.5 percent next year.

Steelmakers Feeling Hopeful

Some steelmakers said developing countries such as Brazil and South Korea accuse the United States, Europe and even Japan of being too slow to close their inefficient, aging mills. But the industrial countries say the developing na-tions are to blame for having piled on tens of millions of tons of new, unneeded capacity.

In a sense, these steelmakers said, it is a debate between the industrial haves, who want to keep their piece of the steel pie, and the developing have-nots, who say they deserve a larger piece.

"Rationalization must be done, and particularly in the United States," said Myung Sik Chung, particularly in the United States," said Myung Sik Chung-executive vice president of the Pohang Iron & Steel Co., the South Korean concern that recently has built several efficient mills. "The United States has a lot of capacity which is not effective capacity and has to be weeded out."

Since 1979, American steelman-ufacturers have reduced their capacity by ahout 16 percent, from 160 million tons to 135 million. Executives concede that more capacity will be eliminated, perhaps as much as another 20 million tons by 1990.

Nevertheless, Donald H. Trautlein, chairman of the Bethlehem Steel Corp., insists that most cuts should come elsewhere. He said the likeliest candidates were some developing countries that must import coal and iron ore to make steel and have as their only advantage cheap labor.

Mr. Trautlein, who is also chairman of the American Iron and Steel Institute, said that "there should be no new capacity built anywhere in the next 10 years," in order to help put supply and demand in balance and keep prices from becoming depressed.

That was not a view shared by the developing countries.

SAY GOODBYE TO SAM

By Michael J. Arlen. 231pp. $12.95. Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 19 Union Square West, New York, N.Y. 10003.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

WHAT is perhaps most intriguing about Michael J. Arlen's first covel is the way it plays upon our expectations and then crosses us up. Arien is probably best known for his television criticism in The New Yorker, which has led to three collections of essays, "Living Room War" (1960) "The View Form High Room War" (1969), "The View from Highway 1" (1976) and "The Camera Age" (1981), as well as "Thirty Seconds" (1980), an amusing account of the making of a television advertise-

But he is almost as well known for the story he told in his two memoirs, "Exiles" and "Passage to Ararat." about digging past the image of his father —the elegant Michael Arlen, who captured his ideal of continental urbanity in a fleetingly famous novel called "The Green Hat" - and finding the Armenian exile whose nriginal name was Dikran Kouyoumdjian and who had struggled unsuccessfully to expunge his past.

Like Arlen, Tom Avery, the hero of "Say Goodbye to Sam," has a famous father who has always kept his distance. At the opening of the novel, Tom decides to take his wife, Catherine, to New Mexico for a visit with his father. Sam Avery, on the ranch he runs in Santa Ana when he is not busy directing big-scale Holly-wood Westerns. Perhaps, Tom hopes, his fa-ther will finally acknowledge him — as the prize-winning nonfiction writer he has become, as the husband of an attractive wife, as a man

Since Arlen's father worked in Hollywood for a time, we expect Sam Avery to resemble the dapper, artificial man who in "Exiles" would pace his study for hours on end, waiting for the words that never came. But behold, Sam Avery is a leathery, weather-beaten giant of a man, a Goliath to Tom's David, a raw, rode, hard-riding Westerner who seems to regard his son as an effete, unsightly weed to be uprooted and disposed of as quickly as possible.

Solution to Friday's Puzzle

For an instant, a reader is amazed at the contrast, and a little embarrassed for having expected art to imitate life. Then he realized that with a series of artistic strokes, Arien has not only given his father the bone-deep American legitimacy that both of them longed for he has also created a strong enough figure to withstand his anger for neglecting him. What's more, Sam proceeds to engage his visiting son in a series of contests, which, while murderous. ly threatening in their way, are far more satisfying than remote indifference and almost as fulfilling as outright love.

Unfortunately, the rest of "Say Goodbye to Sam" is not as engaging as the initial shock of meeting Sam Avery. As well as creating this powerful figure, Arlen has created a vivid sease of the Southwest and its natives. And the tension builds effectively as ald Sam begins to challenge his son for the affection of Catherine, Tom's wife. But past a certain point, there is a formed quality to the start's devaluance. forced quality to the story's development. It's a little too patly schematic the way Tom dreams of his dead mother while delivering Catherine into the arms of his father in an unconscious gesture of reconciliation.

Although it makes a kind of psychological sense, there's something ton sudden about the way the hostility between the two men collapses into love. A somewhat gratuitous touch of melodrama doesn't help much either. Al-though Arien writes sensitively, using his ter-rain to build tight, understated scenes that powerfully evoke the loneliness of men and women under the hig Western sky, nevertheless the machinery creaks after a while.

I'd rate this a solid first novel. Having written prize-winning nonfiction doesn't necessarily prepare a writer in pass one of the most difficult creative tests there is. Nuthing he has written previously could have taught Arlen the skill with which he first shows us Tom Avery's shaky sense of himself, and then, in a deft scene with one of Sam Avery's screenwriters. suddenly reveals how cool Tom looks to an

And there is charm to Arlen's prose, unsurprisingly enough. Here is Tom near the beginning of the novel, introducing us to his preoccupations. "I didn't tell Catherine about my early-morning vigils though once she woke up early too and came into the kitchen where I was sitting. I think I said I was trying to figure things out about my work, which was also true. I'd turned 39 some months before and found much to think about: not maudlin philosophic thoughts about age or being nearly 40, because I rather liked being older; there was something about it that seemed almost like a promotion, like finally making officer's rank. Unlike many of my friends 1 was glad at last to be a growoup, and so fretted over grownup matters: careers and real estate and suchlike: whether to expand my last magazine piece into another book; whether to put aside trying to write decent journalism ('serious confiction') and take an editor's job if it was offered to me; whether to spend the money my mother had left me nn a larger, more uptown apartment, and so on.

Now that Arlen has decided to put aside journalism for entertaining fiction, there's no reason why be shouldn't move forward apace.

Tigers Roar Past Padres To Hold 3-1 Series Lead

By Ross Newhan Los Angeles Times Service

DETROIT - There was nothing classic about Detroit's 5-2 victory over San Diego in Game 3 of baseball's fall classic except a twisting, two-on, two-out catch by the Tiger center fielder, Chet Lemon, in the seventh inning and the near flawless relief pitching of Willie Hernandez

Hernandez, a candidate to win the Cy Young and Most Valuable Player awards, said before the game that his chances of returning in the Tigers next season were "50-50" because of a contract dispute. He later enhanced his case by pitching 21/2 shutout innings in relief of Milt Wilcox on a night on which the Tigers won despite stranding 14 runners.

CAME 3

A crowd of 51,970 saw the local team blow repeated chances to make it a laughter while gifted with 11 walks, one hit batsman and one wild pitch.

The Tigers won it on a four-run second inning in which Marty Castillo hit a two run homer and Alan Trammell ripped an RBf double.

If the Tigers were happy in return to the soft turf of their home field, they were happier yet in face another of San Diego's soft-touch starting pitchers.

This time it was the southpaw Tim Lollar setting the pattern as he combined with Greg Booker and Greg Harris to throw 172 pitches (81 of which were balls) and prove conclusively that it is possible to walk after dark in Detroit. The II walks tied a World Series record set by the

New York Yankees against the Brooklyn Dodgers on Oct 5, 1956, and tied by the Milwaukee Braves against the Yankees a year to the day later.

Lollar, who was 11-13 during the season, pitched only 1% innings in this game, giving up four walks.

four hits and four runs. Booker issued four walks, and Harris, who allowed eight runs in two innings of the opening playoff game, walked three over the final 5% innings.

Lollar had one out in the second when Lemon singled and two out when Castillo homered into the upper deck in left. A man who hit only four homers in 141 regular-season at-bats, Castillo said, "I don't really have home-run power, but when a pitcher throws you a belt-high I astball over the middle of the plate, you should hit it out." Lollar then walked Lou Whitaker, yielded the RBf double to Trammell, walked Gibson and allowed an infield hit by Lance Parrish. He was replaced by Booker, who walked Larry Herndon to force in the inning's fourth run. Singles by Alan Wiggins and Tony Gwynn helped San Diego retrieve a run in the third, but three walks by Booker led to another Tiger run in the bome half. Each Detroit inning seemed like a season unto itself and had a stiffening effect on Wilcox, who is known as the Count of Cortisone because of the many injections he required to ease an arthritic shoulder. He gave up seveo hits while allowing one run in six innings. Bill Scherrer came on in the seventh and gave up a one-out single to Gwynn, a double to Steve Garvey and a sacrifice fly to Graig Nettles.

It was 5-2 with two out and a runner on third when Anderson summoned Hernandez, who converted 32 of 33 save opportunities during the regular season. He saved this one by allowing one hit over 2½ innings., Lemon got an assist when he turned left, turned right and made a reaching catch of an over-the-head drive by Terry Kennedy, the first batter Hernandez faced.

By Thomas Boswell Washington Past Service

DETROIT - Alan Trammell hit a pair of long tworun homers into the left-field stands in Tiger Stadium Saturday to drive home all four runs in leading the Detroit Tigers in a 4-2 victory over the San Diego

Padres in the fourth game of the 81st World Series.

The triumph put Detroit on the brink of its first world title since 1968 as the Tigers held a three-gamesto-one lead. The Padres were counting on Mark Thurmond, their run-of-the-mill lefty, in patch the fifth game Sunday against Dan Petry, an 18-game winner. The Tiger who shared heroic billing with Trammell on this smoky, cool autumn day was Jack Morris, who allowed only five hits for his second complete-game victory of this classic.

If the general tone of this World Series has been slapstick, then two men have stood way above the comic fray: Trammell, who had three hits in this game to give him nine for the Series, and Morris, who has allowed only four runs in 18 innings.

allowed only four runs in 18 innings.

This was, in fact, a three-swing game. Trammell struck twice, in the first and third innings — both times with Lou Whitaker on base. The only Padre moment worth a memory was an upper-deck second-inning line-drive homer by Terry Kennedy. The Padres added a meaningless run in the ninth on a double by Steve Garvey, a ground out and a wild pitch.

Once again, as has been the case in every World Series game, the San Diego starting pitcher was above.

Series game, the San Diego starting pitcher was abominable. Eric Show lasted only 2% innings, giving up five hits and both of Trammell's blasts. The Tigers have greeted the Padres' four-man rotation in this classic with 14 runs in just 10 innings and have knocked out San Diego pitchers in the first, second and third innings in the last three games.

The Padres' bullpen, however, has been excellent beyond belief. On Saturday, Dave Dravecky entered in the third inning and slammed the shutout door for 3½ innings while Craig Lefferts and Goose Gossage each worked a shutout frame. The trio of Dravecky, Andy Hawkins and Lefferts now has the amazing mark of 261/2 scoreless innings in the postseason.

Only four teams in baseball history have come back from 3-to-1 deficits, the most recent being the 1979 Pittsburgh Pirates. Certainly the Padres, the way they have played in this old World War I-style park, do not look much like comeback material.

Perhaps the only Padre showing life was its crusty manager, Dick Williams. Asked how he would rate odds of winning this Series, he snapped, "Probably a lot higher than you would... I don't have in say a word in my ballclub. They know what to do. They've won three in a row before."

The Tigers are fortimate to have Trammell and Morris. Aside from Trammell, who is batting .563 and almost has a lock on the World Series Most Valuable Player award, the Tigers are hitting .182 as a team. Detroit has not scored a run yet after the fifth inning

The Padres belped dig their own hole immediately when Alan Wiggins was charged with a tough and debatable error on the first Tiger offensive play of the game. Trammell stepped up, got the room-service fast ball down the middle that Padres starters seem ordained to throw in the first inning, and hammered it over the 340-foot sign in the left field corner. "Wham bam, thank you, Tram," said the huge

Chet Lemon, the Tigers' All-Star centerfielder, keeps a low profile and often goes unnoticed. But not in Game 3 of the World Series, in which he was a star. He beat out a grounder to the shortstop by sliding into first base behind the Padres' Steve Garvey (above) and later made a spectacular run ning catch on a ball hit by Terry Kennedy to end a

Out of Prison and Into the Movies

By Lawrence Van Gelder New York Times Service

NEW YORK — "Twelve years ago," Anzac Wallace was saying, "I would rather have punched you than talk to Wallace, a full-blooded Maori who is the star of the New Zealand film "Utu," was discussing his life - a life that sounds like a movie waiting to be made.

At the age of 41, Wallace looks back on a childhood of theft and other crimes, on 14 years of prison, on a powerful role in a bitter labor dispute that catapulted him into an unexpected career in movies that has made him something of an international spokesman for his people — and, of course, his is a tale with a love story,

"Utu" describes a Maori rebellion against European settlers in the 1870s. It is Wallace's first film, and in "Utu" the title refers to a Maori concept of honor — he portrays Te Wheke, a Maori scout for British troops who turns against the Pakeha - the Europeans - and leads the bloody uprising after wimessing a massacre of innocent Maori villagers.

The film, whose opening in New York to generally favorable reviews coincided with a major exhibit of Maori art at the Metropolitan Museum, has served to focus attention on New Zealand's Maori history and population, about 300,000 of the country's three million inhabitants. "'Utn,' f think, has many parallels to today's life, particularly the life I've led," Wallace said. "I have always been a very aggressive person, very much like the character of Te Wheke,"

As a result, "I found the part quite easy to play," he said. "f don't say that it was enjoyable, but it was very easy for me to portray an angry man."

The movie, depicting excesses on the part of both the Pakeha and the Maori, mbodies a call for reconciliation, which Wallace firmly supports, although not without a trace of bitterness.

"We now have Pakeha in New Zeaiand," Wallace said, "and many of us feel. we can't do without Pakeha. So we strive to cooperate, we've tried to get on. We are asking that the Pakeha recognize some of our traditions, recognize that we have jumped the fence and sort of learned their culture, if you can call it

"We recognize also that our culture has been taken away from us forcefully, our language has been destroyed through the education avenues. Even my own parents were strapped or caned — they were corpo-punished for speaking the lan-guage," said Wallace, who had to be family lor love, and all the material coached to speak his Maori lines in Պյես.՝

We are just recognizing that we retain our language and encourage those who have drifted or lost their language to get back to it, that while we've been so willing to learn the English language and the English customs, they have not made too much of an effort to come and learn OUIS.

Among these Maori ways, he says is the belief that to go to jail is to disgrace the lamily name. So, he said, "I changed my name out of the blue. My father told me if I got out of jail again, change my

That was the origin of Anzac Wallace, although the name on his birth certificate, he says, is Norman Pene Rewiri. Four years after leaving prison for the last time. Wallace found himself a union chairman in the 13th month of New Zealand's longest-running industrial dispute, involving construction workers on the Mangere Bridge over Manukan Harbor in Auckland.

Geoff Murphy, the director of "Utu," who was looking for someone to play the role of the fierce yet scholarly Te Wheke, saw Wallace in some documentary film footage that showed him chairing a union

"He liked what he saw," Wallace said. After some consultation with Don Biakeney, the executive producer and co-producer, and others, "I was invited to audition. It was all a big dream. I've never been a moviegoer, and when f say it was a dream to be offered a job in a movie, I'm the sort of person who says 'prove it,' and so three days into the film ! still wasn't sure I had the part." Shooting began, he says, on April 19, 1982 and was finished eight weeks later.

"Utu" went on to become New Zea-land's official entry at the 1983 Cannes Film Festival, and Wallace was launched on international celebrity. He had come a long way from Auckland, where he grew

"It's hard to say if it was middle class or not," he said of his background. "We were the only Maori family resident of an elite area. I was brought up with a knife, fork and spoon, and that's how I are our Maori Iood while everybody else was eating with their fingers and thoroughly enjoying it."
Wallace was one of nine children of a wharfie — a waterside worker — and the youngest of the four boys. "All through my life," he said of those days, "I'd known only violence in the home and no streets. It was about three months of will help in labor organizing as much as terror for a lot of people. I soon learned, too, that it was getting me nowhere and probably gave me a passport to jail again and started to temper my violence."

Wallace went back to his old school and arranged to talk to the students about the consequences of crime. After six months, "I feit was getting stale," he said, and abandoned his lectures. He worked on construction jobs for a while and then was hired as foreman on the Mangere Bridge project, which led to his

Since "Utu," Wallace has worked for the New Zealand Laborers Union as an organizer. He as made another movie, "The Silent One," in which he plays a Polynesian, and he has become a communicator-organizer for the Pacific Islanders to participate in trade union affairs.

"I still didn't consider myself an actor even when I did 'The Silent One,' " Wal-But when he came out of prison 10 and am becoming internationally known years ago, he was still bitter. I felt reas an actor. So if I'm offered any parts, Wallace, who is married and has three children, rounds out his biography with the love story.

"In 1974," he said, "I was driving a truck and smashed the truck through a bridge raiting." When he regained consciousness at the wreck site, "I was pretty badly smashed up. There was a white-haired old man praying over me, and I recall him saying something like, When he gets to heaven — , and sometime after that I woke up in a hospital sur-ounded by nurses who I thought were angels. And a lady who used to go and visit strangers in the hospital out of Christian work came to visit me.

"While I was inside, I understood things like relationships with women for me were not lasting, so I taught myself how to kiss, how to speak to women. I determined that the first beautiful woman f met I would kiss and I would marry.

"So this lady who was doing her Christian mission sat on my bed and asked if she could bring me fruit and visit regularly. I said, 'I want to kiss you.' And she responded, and I discovered that the white-haired old man who was seeing me to heaven was this lady's lather. "And that lady is my wife today."

LANGUAGE

A Winner and a Loser

By William Safire

7ASHINGTON — Cenain WASHINGTON — Certain locates words, taken into the outer circle of the English language, rotate quietly within the band assigned them by whatever elite did the importation, bothering nobody else. Then, suddenly, a satellite word slips through the frequency barrier and comes closer to Mother Tongue; it is not yet absorbed and is rarely used by most native speakers, but it is tried out by jargonauts, neologists and avant-gardians often enough to rate a close look by swinging linguists.

Such a word a generation ago was apparatchik, the Russian word for "member of the Communist Party, or apparat," which spent its first decade bandied about by Sovictologists in United States think tanks and by intelligence agents at Langley, then made its way into scholarly journals, then to spy novels, and finally into the real world of English words as a snappy synonym for "bureaucrat," with an added pejoration of "slavish." Today the Russian word working its way in is nomenklatura. In his new book, "How Democracies Perish," the French political philosopher Jean-Francois Revel writes: "Communism . . . necessarily looks outward because it presides over a failed society and is incapable of engendering a viable one. The nomenklatura, the body of bureaucrat-dictators who govern the system, has no choice, therefore, but to direct its abilities toward expansion abroad."

He puts the word in italics and defines it, a signal to the cognoscenti that they might not know this term yet, but a quiz will soon follow. In the same way, when the New York Times columnist Flora Lewis used the term in 1981, she followed the word with this parenthetical definition: "(the secret list of people eligible for responsible jobs)." In 1975, The Economist did a similar thing: "the nomenklatura or name list of top officeholders is classified as well."

I like Flora Lewis's definition best. Nomenclature is an English word coined in 1610, from the Latm nomen, "name," and calare, "to call," and means "a system of naming." That's a far cry Irom this secret Russian list that you have to get on to get anywhere. As Professor John Bailey of Georgetown University puts it: "The list is like a computer printout that gives the names of people in various posi-tions with descriptions of their iobs. Making this nomenklature is necessary for being on track for career advancement."

Although the term is not yet test. ed enough to be in the general dictionaries, its Latin antecedent can be Iound in Eric Partridge's "Origins": "nomenclatura, a calling of names, hence a system of naming which is from "nomenclator, a slave whose office it is, in a court of law to call the names of the clients." (Prior to this was the Greek herald Stentor, whose loud voice in the Trojan War gave birth to the adjective stentorian.)

What an apt etymology: from the name of a job lor a stave to a secret list of jobs held by the elite in a slave society. A new book is out, "Nomenklatura: The Soviet Rufing Class" by Michael Voslensky, defining the word as a vast system of political patronage.

DONALD RUMSFELD, for merly the United States's Middle East negotiator, was asked on the David Brinkley program about ways to retaliate against terrorist attacks. One of his suggestions was "to 'leprodize' the states that are engaged in state-sponsored terrorism; they can be isolated politically and economically."

Leper, from the Greek word meaning "rough, scaly," is a de-scription of a victim of what used to be called leprosy and has been euphemized to Hansen's disease, An adjective, leprous, predates the noun leper and was used by Shake-speare: the Ghost in Hamlet reported that the king "in the porches of my ears did pour the leprous distillment."

However, the only use of a similar verb form that I have been able to find was a 1592 usage of leperize. meaning "to smite with leprosy"; a figurative extension would mean "to treat as a leper," which in olden times meant "to avoid, isolate, cast

Count me among those who make -ize constructions work hard before entering the language. I like "make a leper out of" or "treat as a leper," or, if you are sensitive to the afflicted, "treat as a parial." New York Times Service
